People's Emergency Briefing

National Emergency Briefing

Welcome

Thank you for being here. This film brings together leading evidence on the climate and nature crisis, and what it means for the UK. It is designed to be watched together in communities like this one, creating space for honest conversation and constructive civic engagement.

Across the UK, people are now coming together to ensure these risks are properly understood, openly discussed, and responded to with the seriousness they require.

A growing national effort

The National Emergency Briefing is building support for a government-backed televised emergency briefing to the nation on the climate and nature crisis.

The initiative began at Westminster Central Hall, where more than 1,200 MPs, peers and leaders from across UK society heard directly from senior experts about the scale of the risks facing the UK and the response now required.

This film extends that work into communities and businesses across the country, where people are now inviting MPs to screenings, calling for politicians to support a Parliamentary Call for a televised briefing, and helping bring the film to new audiences.

What you can do next

Open your camera and point it at the QR code to begin:

Support the Parliamentary Call

Guidance on encouraging your MP to support a televised national briefing.

Help bring the film to more communities

Find out how to host a screening in your area, workplace or organisation.

Share your response

Complete the University of Bath questionnaires before and after the film to help build understanding of how people respond to this information.

Stay connected

Receive updates from the National Emergency Briefing and explore further practical next steps.

Scan the code or type www.nebriefing.org/peb